SCRAPPING RAIL MILEAGE

There are 70,000 miles of railway in this country whose service does not pay its own way, according to Robert S. Binkerd, who writes with apparent knowledge and experience in the Atlantic Monthly.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the railroads of the United States, generally speaking, are in a bad way. It is obvious that the situation would be improved if the roads could abandon mileage which is unprofitable and can never be made profitable.

Mr. Binkerd admits frankly that the railroads, as pioneers and as agents of "mass transportation," made possible the building of the highway transportation systems which have now made heavy inroads on the business of the railroads. But this is water over the dam and he thinks it is time for the railroads to revert to the policy of caring for mass transportation, and this means the scrapping of lines which do not pay.

If we deduct from the 70,000 miles of unprofitable lines 35,000 miles which run to certain sections for seasonal business, there will still be 35,000 miles which could be taken up, with the result that the railroads as a whole would be in a healthier condition.

The carriers must get permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission to abandon a single mile of their track, and it is found that local government units are among the most vigorous in their protests against this abandonment. The railroads are heavy taxpayers—so long as they can pay at all—and local governments, looking only to the immediate situation, are reluctant to permit the roads to abandon any mileage.

But when the carriers are so hard pressed that they cannot even pay taxes, as is the case with many of them, it is folly to insist that they operate at a loss when a form of surgical operation would make the whole body more healthy and more vigorous.

ERSATZ BEER

Germany is reported planning to supplant beer as a national drink with a soft drink. Success in that field would be a real test of totalitarian power. Beer has been a German specialty for two thousand years. The inhabitants of that land were indulging in its mild stimulus in the days of Julius Caesar. For the last thousand years its brewing has been brought forward step by step until this malt drink has become associated more with Germany than with any other country, although today America makes the best beer.

The new German drink appeared during the Olympics in 1936 and is called "Barrel Brew." It is made from syrup, sugar and apples and is given a beer coloring and sells for about the same price as beer. The established breweries will be given the task of putting out to the public at the start a volume of this equalizing that of beer. The new drink sounds decidedly sweet for veteran beer drinkers, but no doubt everything tastes the same to a Nazi who has been feasting on sawdust sausage.

State foresters in Pennsylvania report that in the past few years visitors to the state parks have shown a greatly decreased fear of snakes; in fact, they are beginning to evidence a friendly feeling for them. As the pessimist says, "The more I see of men the more I think of snakes."

The GLASS SLIPPER by MIGNON G. EBERHART

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Hours, it seemed to Rue, passed while the police and Brule remained for the most part in the second-floor room where Julie had died. Andy and Guy Cole during the waiting made occasional scouting trips into the hall, Andy coming back with a grave face.

After a while they removed Julie's body. It must have been about then that the first reporters reached the house. Guy saw them.

"Tell 'em we don't know yet whether it was suicide or—or what," said Andy. "Don't say any more than you can help."

Guy looked at him rather pityingly and went away. He came back with news.

"They're going to have an autopsy done right away. Tonight. Meantime they'll question you. They can't make a definite murder charge yet. But they'll proceed as if they knew it to be murder," said Guy rather dryly. "Remember, when they question you, everything I've told you."

He had warned them and he repeated it, undeterred by the stolidly listening ears of the two policemen.

"Chances are the girl simply took an overdose of some medicine."

His matter-of-fact way was subtly sustaining. Guy knew about these things; they happened all the time; their own special nightmare was a labyrinth whose twisting paths Guy could follow.

"I'll stay with you," he said. "Anything they ask that I think might be damaging in the event they prove the girl was murdered, I'll object to. They can't force you to answer anything. Unless, of course, they get enough evidence to justify an arrest. The vista his words opened was immensely chilling. Andy stirred restlessly, gave Rue an anxious look and said in a voice that failed to disguise that anxiety:

"You don't think they're likely to do that, do you? Right now? I mean—well, do you think there's enough evidence against—against anybody to justify an arrest?"

He meant against Rue, of course; everyone knew it.

Guy lighted a cigarette and said he didn't think so.

"Not unless you tell them something you haven't told me. And I wouldn't advise that, Rue."

It was like Guy to address Rue nonchalantly and directly. But it made still clearer her position of prime suspect.

"See here," said Andy, glancing at the policeman uneasily but continuing. "Does she have to tell them about—well, I mean, the tea?"

"Why not? Gross knows he brought up the tea tray; the kitchen girl knows it was ordered and prepared. Besides, the fingerprints will be on the cup, and there's no other explanation for Rue's fingerprints being there and not the girl's, Julie's. But if Julie was poisoned and the poison's been in her stomach long enough to show it was given her before she arrived here, Rue will be in the clear."

It was then that Brule came in, his face like a mask, and said there was nothing new and that the police wanted to question Rue and would she come into the dining room.

"And Guy," said Brule. Rue rose and went to the door. Queer how much will power that slight effort of muscles took.

"Don't be afraid," said Brule, and Andy gave her a look of almost anguished encouragement.

Eight or ten men were in the dining room; they were talking, and one of them was writing on a report blank, and another held short-hand tablets in his hand. They paid no attention to Rue's entrance although all of them saw her; she stood, waiting, and Guy beside her waited also, while a tall thin man with pale blue eyes as remote as ice and deep lines like scars in his cheeks (Lieutenant Angel, he proved to be) finished what he had to say to a brother detective. The face of Oliver Miller appeared in what was to Rue a blur of faces. Then Lieutenant Angel looked directly at her and said: "All right, Mrs. Hatterick. Sit down. Where's that statement, Murphy?"

The man with the shorthair tablet flipped back a few pages and began to read rapidly and in a singsong voice while Rue sat at her own table and listened. Guy made himself extremely comfortable in a chair near her and nodded to Lieutenant Angel and spoke to him by name, and glanced recognizingly at one or two other men sitting and standing about them. Rue realized with a start that the man Murphy was reading a statement that Brule must have made. She listened.

"... and I was reached at the hospital by the message from Mrs. Hatterick. I hurried home and met Doctor Crittenden at the doorstep; he had got the message too. But the girl was dead, and we could do nothing. I called the police because it was obviously a violent death. Question: You knew it was murder? Answer—"

Lieutenant Angel stirred and murmured: "Just read the answers."

"Yes sir. Answer: I didn't know. My wife said the girl came unexpectedly and asked for her and was shown up to her room. When Miss Garder entered she seemed confused and said she'd had a cocktail. Mrs. Hatterick thought the cocktail had affected her and ordered tea and gave the girl a cup of tea. She was trying to make her swallow the tea when the girl became unconscious and died. She telephoned at once for me—"

"That'll do, Murphy. You subscribe to all that, Mrs. Hatterick?"

"Yes." How small and faint her voice sounded; she must speak in a more assured, less frightened way.

"I understand Julie Garder was a friend of yours."

"We trained as nurses together."

"Yes, I know all about that. She was one of the nurses on the case when the first Mrs. Hatterick died. You were the night nurse."

Angel leaned forward. "Mrs. Hatterick, your husband says, and you agree, that you told him Julie Garder was confused, and said she'd had a cocktail. What else did she say?"

Rue swallowed hard, and Guy said nothing. Rue replied: "She was confused; she talked a little in a rambling way; nothing that made sense."

"What'd she talk of?"

"She—she repeated my name and her own; she mumbled something about a cocktail—pink; something about coming to see me—oh, there was nothing sensible and clear."

"Had you invited her to come to see you? I mean to come today specifically? Had you an engagement with her?"

"No."

"You were on sufficiently friendly terms for her to call without an invitation?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Did she come here often?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Julie was busy." He seemed to wait for her to supply it, but something very quiet about Guy seemed to warn her to say no more than was necessary.

"Then you and Miss Garder were still on good terms?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Can you think of anything else she said?"

Guy stirred. "She's told you everything she knows. It's been a shock for Mrs. Hatterick. She's doing well to let you question her at all. Later, if you find the girl's been murdered, Mrs. Hatterick can be questioned more at length."

The lieutenant looked at Guy, and Guy looked blandly back at him.

"All right, Mrs. Hatterick. I appreciate your willingness to be of help," said Angel. "But there's one or two points that I'd like to know more about right now. Whatever the autopsy proves, we'd like to know how she got in the house and how long she was here before she was announced. Your butler says he didn't let her in. That he found her waiting in the drawing room, having evidently been admitted to the house some time previous. Who let her into the house and when?"

"I don't know. I didn't know she was in the house. I heard nothing."

"You didn't see her downstairs?"

"No."

"You didn't know she was in the house at all?"

"No."

"Think carefully, Mrs. Hatterick. Did she take anything while in your room—any capsule or pill?"

"No. I'm sure of that," said Rue and was instantly aware of Guy's disapproval.

The lines in Angel's thin face deepened.

"There's just one more question." He leaned back a little in his chair, holding Rue's gaze with his chill blue own; all at once the room held only silence and watchfulness. This was the real question; this was the sum, the crux of the whole inquiry.

Guy shared Rue's intuition, for he was suddenly as deadly still as a crouching animal. And the question came:

"Tell me this, Mrs. Hatterick. What did Julie Garder know of the death of the first Mrs. Hatterick?"

Guy got to his feet.

"She doesn't need to reply to that, Lieutenant. She doesn't—"

"Let the lady speak, Cole. How about it, Mrs. Hatterick?"

Guy said: "She doesn't have to reply; but I will for her. The girl told her nothing, of course. She told her absolutely nothing of the facts of Crystal Hatterick's death."

"Do you subscribe to that, Mrs. Hatterick?"

Guy answered again. "Look here, Angel; you've had your answer. Tell him, Rue, that I answered correctly. It may as well go on the record."

"Y-yes," faltered Rue, confused by Guy's demand.

A telephone rang in the hall; Angel, disbelief in his cold eyes and another question on his tongue, stopped to listen. They heard the murmur of a voice from the telephone, which was in the recess near the dining-room door. It was one of the detectives; he said yes, and no, and after a pause: "You don't say! ... Okay!"

He appeared at the doorway, eyes seeking Angel's. "It's the doc," he said. "Says it's poison all right. Lethal quantity of some synthetic poison, he doesn't know what yet. Probably a barbituric acid derivative. Can't tell till he runs some more tests. Says it looks to him like murder, all right. But he says there's an awfully funny thing. The girl's hands have turned green; bright green on the—"

"Careful! That'll do! All right, Cole, you and Mrs. Hatterick can go. That's all except hold yourself ready for further inquiry. Now then, Cary, Her hands—Close that door."

ON THE SCREENS

BRISTOL THEATRE

The brilliant talent which won her an Academy Award is again displayed by the vivacious, glowingly lovely Vivien Leigh in Columbia's "21 Days Together," new Bristol Theatre attraction with Laurence Olivier and Leslie Banks also starred. Nor is Mr. Olivier to be overlooked when the laurels are bestowed upon this excitingly "different" new romantic drama, a glorious love story. The handsome star of "Rebecca" and "Wuthering Heights" tops even his superlative performances in these films to make his star-crossed role in the current drama a memorable and inviting one. "21 Days Together" is based upon John Galsworthy's novel, "The First and the Last," a story of London sweethearts who find a brief moment of idyllic happiness. The film, humanely directed by Basil Dean, can easily be regarded as the season's most emotion-stirring production... with the year's most exciting stars.

RITZ THEATRE

The penalties of being prehistoric... Carole Landis has the romantic feminine lead in "One Million B. C.," the picture of cave men and women which Hal Roach produced and directed and which is now on view at the Ritz Theatre. She is Loana, The Golden One, and mighty pretty, too, in her costumes of animal's skins and shell necklaces.

Paramount's daring excursion into the realm of film fantasy, "Dr. Cyclops," the picture whose background, plot and characters have been a closely-guarded secret these many months, shows today at the Ritz Theatre.

The Great Game of Politics

not to adopt any form of political strategy without Mr. Flynn's knowledge and consent. In other words, Mr. Roosevelt will deal directly with Mr. Flynn, either in personal conference or over the telephone which is expected to be in daily use between them. There are to be no political games played on the side from which Mr. Flynn is barred.

TWO reasons are given for Mr. Flynn's insistence upon these conditions. One is that he recalls the fact that the amateur politicians of the "inner circle" were the ones who drove a wedge between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Farley and were responsible for the shabby treatment of the latter. He does not propose to have that happen to him. The other is that, having seen the way in which Mr. Hopkins bungled the "draft" at Chicago, Mr. Flynn is anxious, for the sake of his reputation as a professional politician, to keep him out of the campaign. Therefore, Mr. Roosevelt has agreed not to let anyone block the channel of personal political communication between him and Mr. Flynn. "All stories to the contrary," declares one of the more pontifical of these journalistic reflectors, "may safely be disregarded."

THAT is fine. But what does it do to the contention of the third-termers that Mr. Roosevelt is absorbed in the "great problem of the Presidency"; that his mind is wholly upon the question of national defense; that he has no thought of politics and is unable to campaign for himself? The answer is that it knocks the props from under that contention. It completely confirms the statement made in this place that at this moment Mr. Roosevelt is in politics up to his neck; that behind the screen of indifference to politics he is actively conducting his own campaign; that the picture of a President reluctant to run again and unable to give any time to the business of re-electing himself is as hypocritical a piece of humbuggery as has been known in American politics.

IN BRIEF, Mr. Roosevelt is deliberately trying to fool the people. Whether he succeeds or not remains to be seen. It is true that most of them seem easy to fool, but this business of using an international crisis as a means of keeping himself in power beyond the limit which all other Presidents have observed is so crude that it would appear only those determined to be fooled could swallow it. Nothing quite so obvious has been attempted in a good many years.

FROM authoritative and recognized spokesmen of the White House the statement is made that Mr. Flynn, the professional campaign manager, proposes to deal directly with Mr. Roosevelt on all matters political and that all messengers, special representatives and liaison officers are to be eliminated. There are to be no go-betweens. If this means anything, it means that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Flynn will be in constant consultation and closest touch throughout the campaign; that every important decision made will be as a result of conferences between the two men; that all ideas and thoughts of a political nature which Mr. Roosevelt has will be personally conveyed to Mr. Flynn and talked over with him.

A CANDIDATE and his campaign managers have got to be in close communication and there has to exist the clearest possible understanding between them. If that cannot be achieved personally, it must be achieved through an intermediary. It is now emphatically stated that there will be no intermediary. This tells the story. That makes this pose of aloofness from politics completely transparent. It ought to make considerably clearer, too, the essential fakery behind this third-term attempt. If once the people get a clear view of the kind of game that is being played, they are not likely to leave much of that attempt.

BRISTOL TENNIS PAIR SET THE PACE FOR OTHER SEEDED DUOS

Lawrence and Green in Trenton Tournament Win Their Games

GO TO THIRD ROUND

Games Will Continue Tonight On Cadwalader Park Courts

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 15—Sixteen teams, last night, advanced to the third round of the city men's doubles tennis tournament. The seeded list remained undisturbed.

Defending Champions Herb Lawrence and Nelson Green, of Bristol, set the tempo with an easy victory and the seven other seeded combinations followed example by turning in straight-set wins. Lawrence and Green eliminated Jack White and Ed Miller, 6-1, 6-1.

Five ranked teams—Fritz Kuser and Jim Allen, Harry Pfitzinger and Lou Applestein, Eddie Moylan and Bob Boyd, Norman Swayne and Russ Cloak, Jim and Bill Dwyer—moved ahead with the loss of less than four games. Kuser and Allen, title threats, had all their shots in working order as they ousted Frankie Capperella and Russ Mycock, 6-0, 6-0.

Longest match of the night—almost two hours—saw Milt Johnson and Santo Belli outlast Bob and Tom Backes, 2-6, 7-5, 6-4. In the only other three-setter, George Gretton and Bill Sharkey outlasted Bob Brown and El Knorr, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2.

Jack Hollister and Jack Seiger were the victors in the best-played match of the night. They teamed well at the net to eliminate Dez Gatti and Jim Brooks, 8-6, 6-4.

In tonight's round of 16, two favored teams face fairly stiff tests. Joe and Jim Waldron will be tested by a pair of veterans, Bob Richardson and Harvey Saunty. Chick Bublitz and Charlie Covert will aim at an upset win over Pfitzinger and Applestein.

SUBURBAN LEAGUE

SCHEDULE NEARS END

The Bristol Suburban League is coming down the home stretch. Tonight, one game will be played, King Supply meeting St. Luke's at Croydon. A victory for King will practically put them in a post for a playoff position while if St. Luke's lose, they are out of it entirely.

It seems as if Y. M. A. has the championship in the bag. All that the Y's need is one more victory which will assure them of at least a tie for first place. The Y's have won 16 and lost 6 and hold a full game lead on the two M. A. gets a game from Rohm and Haas which adds another win with two games remaining to be played.

In the Softball League, Madison meets Harriman and DiRenzo plays Manhattan on Grundy's field, while P. O. S. of A. meets Grundy's on the Pine Street diamond.

CROYDON Y. M. A. NEARS PENNANT OF LEAGUE

Henry Morgan's Croydon Y. M. A. team neared the pennant of the Bristol Suburban League last evening by noosing out the Voltz-Texaco nine, 3-2, in an exciting game on Landreth's field.

It was poor base-running which caused the gasoilers to go down to defeat as they wasted many scoring opportunities in the tilt. They had a total of seven runners left on base and in the second half the bags loaded yet failed to score.

The tilt was a hurler's match between Jimmy Cooper and Herman Puma with the latter being the winner, holding the Voltz team to five hits, three of which went to Danny Mazzilla. Cooper was solved for seven hits and two bad innings, the first and the last spelled his defeat.

In the first inning, "Jock" McCue sent two runs across with a sizzling single to right. In the final inning, Friel batted in what was the winning marker with a bingle to right. McCue was on base at the time.

Hutchison batted in the first Voltz run in the third while the second marker was squeezed across the platter by "Boake" Carter. The fielding feature of the tilt was a shoe-string catch by Fanini in the fifth which caused Oppman a double or triple.

DIAMOND NINE WINS OVER JOHNSON STARS

The Diamond Sporting Club team, of the Bristol Suburban League, defeated the Johnson Colored Stars, last evening on Landreth's field, before a large crowd. Final score was 5-2.

A home run by "Socks" Seibold, husky Diamond outfielder, was the feature of the game. The blow came in the sixth with the bases bare.

"Lefty" Keogan did the pitching for the winners, allowing the colored boys three safe hits. One of these, a single by Long, in the fourth accounted for the losers' pair of tallies.

Fletcher, DeRisi, and Seibold, led the winners at the plate with two hits each. DeRisi's single in the first scored two of the Diamond runs.

Queer Type of Boats Once Plied Delaware

carry 20 tons, although the load for the ordinary boat was from two to five tons less. The load up stream was about two tons. On the Delaware the crew usually consisted of three men. On some more difficult streams more were needed.

It is stated that the movement downstream was by floating with the current, with the aid if necessary of two 18-foot oars. "Setting the poles" was the common method for propelling upstream. These poles were 12 to 18 feet long and shod with iron. On such poles the crew "walked the boards," starting at the forward end, with poles on the river bottom and top ends to shoulders, walked to the stern, pushing the boat forward. While they rapidly returned to repeat the process, the captain who steered, used a pole to hold the boat from going back with the current or, when necessary, pushed it forward by "setting" with a pole in the short distance which the length of the stern deck permitted.

Additional information on the "Durham" type of boats, tells that: "For the better footing of the captain in this process, as well as for drainage, the stern deck had a slight incline backward. The forward deck was even with the gunwale and the surface was slightly rounded, so as to shed the water. The steering oar was 33 feet long, with a blade 12 inches in width. It is possible that the shape of the oar may have been slightly varied, according to the necessities of builders.

"A keel plank" 12 inches wide, was a part of the hull, there being no keel. The boat was painted black and was without special name. A movable mast six inches in diameter and 33 feet long, with a boom of the same length and a three cornered sail, enabled the boat to sail up stream when the wind favored. Being without keel or center board, it could only sail with the wind astern, but, with a favorable wind, the progress was very rapid.

"Sometimes the nature of the banks admitted of drawing the boat along by catching hold of the overhanging bushes, a process known as 'pulling brush'.

"In descending some of the rapids the 'walking boards' were set up on edge as 'splash boards', to keep out the water which would dash over the sides. To admit of bailing out any water which might gain access to the hull, 'bailing places' were provided at the ends of the decks. Water falling on the stern deck was carried below by a drain pipe.

"It is said that at one time there were several hundreds of these boats on the river. The largest fleet was at Easton from which place were shipped large quantities of grain, whiskey and other products. The life of the Durham boatsman was very laborious. The descent of many of the rapids was attended with much danger requiring constant vigilance, and the ascent of the stream was accomplished only by hard work.

The disappearance of the Durham boat from the Delaware about 1830 is readily accounted for, it not being adaptable for canal use, when canals came into great favor. Many of the Durham boats which remained over a few years, however, were lost in a great freshet in January of 1841.

Confesses Slaying Son
Bridgeton, N. J., Aug. 15—Weeping and in a daze, Anthony Bertini, 50, proprietor of a Bridgeton barber shop, today surrendered to Commissioner of Public Safety Mervin H. Beach and confessed slaying his youngest son, Salvatore, 24.

At Bertini's establishment, police found Salvatore dead beside the barber chair at which he worked. He had been killed by a charge from a shotgun fired into his chest at close range. Relatives told detectives the father and his sons had quarreled frequently about the way the shop was operated.

Two U. S. Army Fliers Killed
New York, Aug. 15—Two U. S. Army fliers met instant death today when their plane plummeted to earth in a field near the Boston Post Road at suburban Rye.

Flames enveloped the craft immediately after the crash. Police and firemen sped to the scene and an ambulance was dispatched from a nearby hospital.

Victims of the crash were Lieut. Henry C. Thompson, 25, of Westby, N. Y., a Reserve officer attached to the Fifth Bombardment Squadron, Mitchell Field, and Private E. E. Spencer, 24, of Wellsboro, Pa., also attached to Mitchell Field.

Deny Italy Asked Greece To Renounce Aid Guarantee

Athens, Aug. 15—Reports that Italy has demanded that the Greek government renounce Britain's guarantee of aid in the event of aggression are without foundation, it was understood in Athens today.

"The situation is developing calmly," Greek authorities declared.

Claim Greece Decided To Reject Italian Demands

London, Aug. 15—The London Daily Express reported from Athens today that the Greek Cabinet "decided to reject" Italian-German demands that Greece renounce the British guarantee of aid in event of aggression.

Hitler Fails To Arrive

London, Aug. 15—Believe it or not, Britain was downright disappointed today—"Hitler Day"—when the Fuehrer failed to appear.

August 15 was the day, according to accepted legend, when Hitler was to have led his victorious legions into Nazi-occupied London.

RABBIT MEAT CANNED

NEW YORK—(INS)—Rabbit meat, heretofore largely overlooked in the American diet, is now being marketed in 8-ounce jars and 10 and 31-ounce cans, with or without bones. Food Industries magazine reports.

BAND BRINGS RESULTS

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—(INS)—Already, undreamed of results have been produced by the recently organized police band. Daily now, the downtown din is punctuated pleasantly with melodious outpourings from the traffic officers' whistles. Three of the crossing directors are members of the band, and observers have been quick to note the improvement in the "brass section."

UNIQUE ENTRANCE

BOSTON—(INS)—Like the entrance to the proverbial doghouse cartoonists portray for helpless husbands, is the door to Boston's unique playground for small children. A lot adjacent to St. Stephen's Episcopal Church is enclosed by a high wall. It is called "The Tot Lot" and the entrance is so designed that little folk, three to eight, alone can enter. It keeps out older and bigger lads, who might spoil the fun for the youngsters.

CHICAGO—(INS)—The adoption of centralized purchasing by 75 counties indicates county government may not always be the "dark continent of American politics," according to the National Consumers Tax Commission, which says this method saves taxpayers 10 to 15 per cent in cost of supplies and service.
